Considerable excitement was aroused this week owing to the finding of a girl baby buried in some shrubbery at the east end of the town. It was thought at first that a crime had been committed, but upon investigation it was found that the child was still born on the 1st of April, and had been buried there.

Don't you think it would be well to put in a piece of sidewalk in the vacant gap on Main street between 4th and 5th streets? The Coleman hotel? An accident may occur here, then there may be a lawsuit. The pitcher may go to the well a long time before it gets water, but usually at last it comes to grief.

Mike Phillips, the man who was acquitted of the murder of Montie Lewis, finds it difficult to procure work. In fact no one will give him any thing to do. He was arrested as a vagrant on Sunday and sent to the workhouse. If Mike wants to work it is clear that he will have to get out of the Crow's Nest Pass.

J. R. Crawford, organist of St. Alban's church, has started a class in piano and organ instruction. Mr. Crawford has a certificate from Trinity College, England, and understands music thoroughly. He will take pupils in Coleman, Blainmore and any town in the Crow's Nest Pass where his services are required. Intending pupils should see him personally, or write to him at Coleman. Careful attention will be given to beginners.

The Miner's Union hospital has been admitting patients since 1st of March, 1908. Since then, a little over two years, the following class of cases have been treated: Surgical, 25; medical, 34; obstetric, 8; total, 67. Besides amputations and other operations the medical cases include severe cases of acute pneumonia, two of acute pleurisy and several bronchitis, showing the prevalence of respiratory diseases. Of the 67 admitted there have been 59 recoveries and two deaths.

On Tuesday evening a number of the ladies gave a very successful social and dance in the Eagles hall. During the evening not many ladies were present, but nevertheless a very pleasant time was had. Messrs. Crawford, White and Mrs. Nelson presided at the piano. J. Anderson played the violin. The party enjoyed the dance to the fullest, and it was not before 2 o'clock that the "Home, Sweet Home" waltz was played. The ladies served sandwiches, cake and coffee, which was much enjoyed. Mrs. Smart, Mrs. W. A. Jones, Mrs. D. J. Hill, Mrs. F. Graham, Mrs. H. Green, Miss McIntyre and Miss Anthony were instrumental in making the affair a success.

KILLED AT FRANK

Last Saturday Ernest Lourie, a miner, was killed in the mine at Frank by coal falling on him. He leaves a wife and one son, 8 years old. Mrs. Lourie returned only two months ago from France. Cornerer Disney of Coleman held an inquest, and it was found that death was accidental.

THE BAND

The band boys are practicing almost nightly, and have done remarkably well since they re-organized. They have sent for a lot of new music which will be used for the celebration on July 1st. Wait till you see Coleman's band with their new uniforms. Sixteen new suits have been ordered. They will be blue with gold stripes on the trousers and peak caps. When the new uniforms are delivered the band will present a smart appearance and Coleman will have cause to feel proud of the fine class of men that compose it. The boys expect to appear on the street in a few days and render some of their new selections. J. R. Upton, leader of the band at Frank, Coleman has been rendering good service and giving the boys a few pointers which they appreciate.

A PLEASANT PARTY

Last Saturday evening about twenty friends assembled at the home of Mr. Marshall Laird to give a little surprise to Miss Bella and Annie Laird who went to Victoria on Sunday morning.

With a new committee and the good material composing them the head committee may be sure of the work being done to their entire satisfaction. The head committee have acted wisely in appointing these committees, so that the different sports will be looked after in a business like manner. And it is now for the gentlemen whose names appear on these committees to use discretion and act to the best advantage possible. Let each and every one work in complete harmony, and the result will be that everyone will enjoy themselves to the fullest, and everything will pass off satisfactorily.

The head committee are to be congratulated upon the success they have already attained, and they are working with a will to make the celebration of the Crow's Nest Pass in general the largest and best celebration they ever had, and one long to be remembered.

In the evening there will be an entertainment, after which a grand ball will be given in the spacious and elegant new hall being erected by the Miner's Union. This ball should be a huge success, and no doubt, it will be, for the hall will accommodate at least 200 couples with ease and comfort. If you want the most enjoyable dance you ever had be sure and attend on the evening of July 1st.

The head committee are putting every effort into effect to secure the square of ground between the C.P.R. track and the new hall for the sports. It is the most convenient grounds in town for sports of all kinds, and if procured will be under the direction of the central committee who will have sole charge of it. A good time should be made of this celebration, and the C.P.R. and the coal company with reference to trying to get the grounds in question, and it is expected this will be accomplished.

Already Mr. Manly and some of the boys have done some work on the ground, and if it can be got the sports festival will have the grounds.

It is expected there will be a grand street parade, with a procession, home racing, and children's parade, the children all carrying flags, and other interesting features too numerous to mention besides all the games on the grounds.

The brass band is getting in good form, practicing almost every night, and with their new marches and new smart uniforms will give a good account of themselves and deliver the proceedings to a great extent. So do not fail to see the band on Wednesday, July 1st, as you will enjoy yourself. You "pay your money and take your choice," and the band will be at Coleman, in the Crow's Nest Pass.

William Follow of Macleod, government road inspector, was in Coleman on Tuesday, and he and contractor Sandridge had a long talk about the rock cut and the road west of the town. Mr. Sandridge drove the inspector over the road so that he could see for himself the bad condition that it is in. Mr. Follow wrote to the government while here and stated the almost impassable condition of the road.

Mr. Sandridge expects to start work on the road on Monday morning next, when bridges will be built and the road be put in good shape for traffic.

The Rev. C. O. Main of Cranbrook, B.C., preached the anniversary services in the Institutional church last Sunday both morning and evening to large and appreciative congregations. Mr. Main is a pleasing speaker and his addresses were much enjoyed. On Monday evening Mr. Main gave a lecture entitled "A Trip to the Yukon." The church was filled, the lecture very interesting and instructive, but the slides, owing to the great strength of the electric current, were not good.

The current of the town plants is 200 volts direct current, while that which is used at the mine is a little over a hundred. Thus making it unable to give a clear picture. The Rev. A. M. Pincher, B.A. of Knox church, Lethbridge, assisted at the evening's entertainment.

Coleman to Celebrate in Royal Style, Sports of All Kinds.

Coleman has had celebrations before, but the one to be held on July 1st, Dominion Day, will surpass anything ever held in the Pass. A citizens' meeting was held on Monday and a committee appointed to look after the business of holding a monster demonstration. A. Cameron, acted as chairman. A committee was appointed consisting of Dr. Westwood, chairman, Wm. Graham, vice-chairman and D. J. McIntyre, secretary-treasurer. This committee was empowered to appoint other committees to look after the different sports, etc., so that no hitch would take place.

It was carried unanimously that Coleman would annually hold a celebration on Dominion Day.

In Spite of Hunt Merrivale.

By ETHEL DOUGLAS.

Copyrighted, 1906, by M. M. Cunningham.

Nancy started angrily as the porter dropped a suit case into the front seat of her sister and Philip Graham followed him to the door.

"This is unbecoming," she said tensely when the porter had taken himself off. "How do you expect that I was to be left alone?"

"I am afraid that you will not credit my protestations," said Graham soberly. "But I assure you that my surprise equals your own. I was telegraphed for not two hours ago. I had just time to throw a few things into the suit case and run for the train. I was under the impression that you were to remain with your aunt, and that last night would make no difference in your plans."

"Last night had nothing to do with it," disclaimed Nancy. "Father wired me to go. I am afraid that it is serious, and you elect to follow me and annoy me with your arguments."

"I have already assured you of my entire ignorance of your presence on the pier," said Philip stiffly. "In proof of my good intentions I shall betake myself to the smoker until I am able to arrange an exchange of seats with the conductor."

He raised his hat and stalked forward in the direction of the café car, leaving Nancy with a feeling of sadness. Only the night porter had been proposed to her and had been refused. She was certain that her aunt, Mrs. Merrivale, had managed to get word to Philip that Nancy had been telegraphed for. His presence was a part of Mrs. Merrivale's match-making plans.

Had she been left to herself Nancy could have accepted Graham; but being a young person of spirit, she declined to be forced upon Graham or to have him forced upon her. From the beginning Mrs. Merrivale's plans had been too obvious.

They were flying through the yard now. She could not leave the train.

GRAHAM PASSED HER ON HIS WAY TO THE DINING CAR.

Of course Philip would be back later to explain that he was unable to effect an exchange into another car. Probably he would spend the evening across the section from her, and, unlike the maid, there was no place to which Nancy could retreat.

"She was genuinely surprised when presently a stranger porter came for the suit case, placing another in the seat in its place. She smiled to herself with satisfaction. It was plain to be seen that she had shown Graham how she had penetrated his plan, and the maid, who was evidently a shrewd girl, wondered if he would leave the train at Philadelphia; then mentally she scolded herself for taking any interest in Philip Graham's movements.

They were well past Philadelphia when Graham passed her on his way to the dining car, and Nancy realized him for his persistence in remaining away from her. At least he was too close to betray his disappointment that his ruse had failed.

The night had settled down. Lights were dim, and reading was impossible. Nancy and her aunt were silent, and the porter, who had been sitting in the dining car, and she resumed herself to filling the hour until the berth was made up. The message calling her home had been vague in the extreme, and in its very vagueness it was the more alarming. Her father might be dying for all she knew, and she thought her down upon her.

She was peculiarly sensitive to sounds, and the atmosphere of the half deserted car was depressing. Through the closed door of the stateroom at her back came the wailing cry of a baby, to which she occasionally added the more lusty note of a growing child. Across the aisle a man played innumerable games of solitaire, the sharp rattle of the shuffle punctuating his grunting, half audible comments on the run of bad luck. Just ahead two women were discussing dressmaking in shrill voices which rose above the murmur of the train, and here and there some man looked idly back in his seat and turned his newspaper with a rustle that jarred on nerves already in a tension.

Nancy felt that she must scream. She was not that she must scream. She her interview with Philip, and when at last she had been able to close the door she had been obliged to read the telegram calling her home. From then until that time it had been a steady confusion, and the meeting with Philip in the car had added the final touch to her nervous condition.

As he returned from the diner to seek the car, she had half started from her seat, but she had time to reflect that it would never do to tell Philip that she needed him. He would think that she was seeking to reopen the question of last night, and he would suggest that the need was permanent.

But as the minutes dragged past Nancy's discomfort increased, and at last she signified the need of a change. The porter grinned understandingly as he went forward to the café car and presently returned with Graham, whom he presented with the proud air of accomplishment won by the magician who extracts a rabbit from a hat.

"You are ill?" Philip asked, with grave concern, as he noticed the new tips and the feverish sparkle of her eyes.

"Not ill," she explained, "but I shall be presently if I have to sit here and wait for the coming of those children with no one to talk to. I thought—perhaps you wouldn't mind doing a charitable act and talk to me for a little while."

"Philanthropy becomes a pleasure when it assumes so inviting a form," he declared, with a smile, as he sank into the seat opposite her. "I am glad that you are a capital conversationalist, and almost before she realized it the porter had begun to take down the berth, and Graham glanced at his sister with a look of surprise.

"There's the whistle now," said Nancy as she reached for her hat.

The train slowed down, and presently they were pacing up and down the platform where there was a breath of fresh air before we face the smother of the berth."

The porter from Graham's car approached them as Nancy resumed her seat. He handed Graham a telegram.

"I wired your father for more particulars," Philip explained, when he had read the message. "Your aunt from San Francisco is visiting your father and wished to see you before she returns to the city."

"Is that all?" Nancy's face expressed the relief she felt. "Isn't it odd I never thought of that? But I never told you that I was worried about father's health?"

"You told me that you were worried about your mind is set at rest," said she good night.

Nancy smiled when she saw that almost reached the end of the aisle; then she ran after him, catching up with him just as he reached the vestibule.

"Is that all you wanted to say?" she asked as she swung lightly toward him.

"Not all I wanted to say," he replied, "but that I was permitted to say."

"The rest is permitted, and the answer is 'Yes' this time," was the impulsive reply. "I'll marry you even if Aunt Merrivale does want me to."

And Graham's eyes smiled contentedly as he saw that she was not the rowdy lass. He was not appreciative of matchmakers himself.

Colors in Dreams.

Red and yellow, the dream colors of Dr. Havelock Ellis is right. No other hues come to the dreamer of dreams. Sirotho has declared that red is the most primitive of colors, and long ago prehistoric from which human beings derived their origin on the new earth probably responded to or was affected by red color waves.

In the depths of the sea the algae, or seaweed, are red. With the savage red is the favorite color, and for a bright piece of red calico African savages gladly would give valuable elephant tusks.

Red strikes the note of intense emotion. It is the color of joy, exultation, jubilation. Savages paint themselves red and rejoice at seeing each other in burning hues. German women of the early ages daubed their bodies with brilliant red and yellow and considered themselves most beautifully adorned.

On sacred festivals in Rome and Greece, Phrygian records, red was used for the statues of Jupiter and was the color of religious rejoicing. The human eye, it is said, can distinguish 100,000 different hues or colors and can appreciate and differentiate twenty shades of each hue. In other words, the eye is capable of 2,000,000 color impressions.

His Diamonds and His Pasts.

Bob Palmer, the comedian, had been originally a big dancer, a fast, pretty fellow, well known among his colleagues on the stage. One evening when dressed for the character of Sir Brilliant Fashion he strutted into the green room with buckles sparkling on his shoes and a fine diamond on his finger. A brother actor inquired if his gems were real. "To be sure they are," replied Palmer, with a flourish of the reply, whereupon Bannister remarked, "I congratulate you, Bob, for I can remember when you were nothing but paste."

Palmer did not take the joke with coming good humor, and an angry altercation ensued, which was only broken when Mrs. Jordan cried out: "Why don't you stop this kind of talk?"

Bob? Stick him against the wall!" London Telegraph.

VERY QUEER PEWS.

Amusing Oddities of Some Ancient English Churches.

Some pews in the fine old church at Malpas, Cheshire, England, possess a most amusing peculiarity. Each one consists of several seats, which are really, though not apparently, detached. One looks only and comfortably. In this case appearances are deceptive, for should one occupant of any one seat lean forward while "hidning nothing" as they go on the floor. The seat is so constructed as to easily tip over when any weight is placed on its outer or front edge and was so designed to prevent people from going to sleep in church.

We still find in a few of our ancient churches the high pews, luxurious cushions and curious fittings of former days.

In the good old times, when the squire was lord of all he surveyed in the village, his pew in the parish church was the largest of his kind in England. One such pew occupies the whole of the south transept of the Minutiville church at Gatton, in Surrey. It has a fireplace, a low seat which extends around two sides of the room and blue tapestry decorations on the walls. There are three or four ordinary pews for the use of the squire's servants, and a covered way leads to Gatton Hall, some few yards away. There may be some truth in the story that a former squire used to enjoy a pipe by the fireplace during the sermon and that if he became weary he would go out through the private door to the churchyard.

A similar pew exists in a church at Colwich, Staffordshire. It has a staircase leading to a private door, and it is said that the squire used to go to convey letters and that the servant brought in cake and wine for consumption during the service.

The royal pew of St. George's chapel, Windsor, is peculiar, because it is the largest of its kind in England, and on account of its being situated above the choir, down upon which the Queen can see the service from a fine view of London.

In little Benjamin Church, Norfolk, is a pew for strangers and workmen, which was constructed by a shepherd and bears a cheerful, suggestive piece of ornamentation in the shape of the carvings of a skeleton.

Royalty and Railways.

Two interesting personalities are soon to retire from the railway world. Mr. George Wright, superintendent of Victoria station, on the London, Brighton & South Coast line, is giving up his post in July; and the retirement of Mr. William B. Sturges, stationmaster at the South-Eastern & Chatham terminus, has already been announced. They are officials who have been responsible at their respective stations for the safety and comfort of the long list of royal persons, English and foreign, who have traveled to and from the continent by Victoria. Mr. Wright has given some preliminary remarks on his retirement.

Victoria was a frequent visitor to his station, and from the time of her arrival. When the Queen died, Mr. Wright was responsible for the arrangements for her funeral. He was on duty from Osborne to Victoria, and King Edward expressed his high appreciation of them.

Of the late King of Portugal and the late Crown Prince Mr. Wright has the pleasantest recollections. Mr. Mickey Wright is his description of the murdered monarch. The two royal personages who preferred to travel slowly were Queen Victoria and the late Shah of Persia. Her Majesty never cared to travel at a speed higher than from 40 to 45 miles an hour, and the Shah was frightened and speeded over 20 miles an hour were attained. In February, 1884, part of the train was derailed by a fire, and the locomotive was deposited in the cloakroom containing dynamite, and when this exploded it wrecked the cloakroom and the ticket office, besides doing other damage. Mr. Wright, who lived in the neighborhood, heard the explosion and hurried to the station. He found that the flames had been speedily extinguished. He stated that when at the time of the explosion was fixing the fire hose near the cloakroom, alone was injured, but not seriously.

After the Victoria explosion a search was made at the other railway stations, and at Kingdington and Chatham. In the latter station dynamite were found in the cloakrooms. The dynamites were never discovered. They escaped, it was believed, to America. Mr. Wright has only had to deal with one strike. This occurred many years ago when he was on the western section. The engine-drivers went on strike, but returned after two days. Guards were pressed into service as firemen in order to keep the service running. Since Mr. Wright took charge of the station the traffic has been multiplied by three.

Decrease of Crime.

The number of people tried for indictable offences in 1906 in England was 50,079, as against 54,667 in 1897, when the population was forty per cent less than now.

This is revealed in a Blue Book issued recently by the Home Office, giving the statistics for 1906. The number of crimes are larcenies, and these diminish in good times. Drunkenness and crimes of violence tend to increase in good times. Prosecutions for riot—common fight—cases are comparatively rare, and serious offences of poisoning appeared to be fewer, but the prosecutions for attempts to commit suicide had continuously increased.

Out of 10,390 persons convicted at assizes and sessions twenty-seven were sentenced to death out of these sentences eighteen were committed to penal servitude for life.

One of the saddest scenes passed in the report deals with the steady increase of coming, attributed to illustrated articles describing the process.

A PRECOCOIOUS BOY.

Has Moustache and Possesses a Bass Voice at Eight Years.

It is almost impossible to imagine a boy with such a moustache and a building black moustache, but such a child does exist in the person of Joseph Williams, the son of a painter and decorator living in Maidstone. The child has no idea of music, but he has the voice of a man, and Mr. Parry Cole, a church organist in the district, who discovered him, intends to train him to sing in public. At

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.

Mr. Cole's house a reporter personally tested the boy's voice, and found that he could go down the scale to the low G, and even a note or two below that, singing with the tone and power of a matured bass. In appearance the boy is big for his age, is very dark, and has rather protruding front teeth. He is extremely bashful, and scarcely ever laughs. To the questions put to him he replied haltingly. His voice broke, he said, when he was seven (he will be nine in a week). For a time the parents took no notice of this, thinking that his singular vocal production was due to a cold, but later, as his voice showed no signs of changing, they took him to the hospital, and he continued to visit the hospital every Saturday for nearly two years, during which he was seen by no fewer than thirteen doctors and specialists, among them Sir William Broadbent. They could come to no other conclusion than that the child was a freak of nature. His mother will not allow his moustache to be shaved until he is twelve years old. Mr. Cole has already had offers of engagements for the boy from impresarios, and he has already in a few weeks he will have trained him sufficiently to appear in public.

New Controller of Times.

Cyril Arthur Pearson, who has just secured a controlling interest in the London Times, is a man but little over 40, but he has already had a remarkable career. He was born in 1866, at Winchester, and was a member of the staff of Sir George Newnes, proprietor of The Strand Magazine, Tit-Bits and other publications. He rapidly rose to the position of managing editor.

POLICE KNOW ALL "REDS."

Recent Plots Against Monarchs Probably Hatched on British Soil.

At the present time there are no fewer than 3,000 Anarchists in London, all well known to the police. The bulk of them are the dreamers, philosophers, socialists and visionaries of the movement. Some of them even discourage the bomb throwing policy, though they allow that an Anarchist is entitled to take what course he pleases.

Others again organize revolutionary plots abroad. Many an Anarchist atrocity which has startled the world has been planned in the neighborhood of Soham and Tottenham Court road.

People are often puzzled to know at what Anarchists aim, aside from the mere waste of the destruction of human life and property.

"Please govern me as little as possible," wrote a famous jurist not long ago. Carry that to its extreme, and say "I won't be governed at all," and you get the Anarchist creed.

He is open to war with any and every authority which restricts his license to do whatever he pleases. He is anti-monarchist, anti-republican, anti-suffragist. He calls for free contracts on a basis of equality between man and man, without regard to position or rank at any moment. He calls for land and all capital bequeathed to him, and therefore common property. That society may obtain possession of its own under the widest freedom of the individual, all authority must be destroyed.

With human nature perfected and beautified, with every man not only good and brave, but equally good and brave, the unfettered liberty of the individual would mean the millennium, because everybody would be as good as his neighbor with perfect goodness and perfect justice.

But human nature being what it is, a jumble and mix of good and bad and middling, of selfishness and sacrifice, of wisdom and folly, of knowledge and ignorance, personal liberty must be subject to restrictions and limitations, and that is the happy mean, which gives people whose system of government is the widest liberty within the justest laws.

It is the wide liberties of England which makes it possible for 3,000 Anarchists to shelter in London. England is a land of liberty, and liberty is to them. Here they are not hounded down for their opinions; they are only punished when they come into actual conflict with the law. But even in England, if the initiative Anarchist determined on assassination, he would be practically impossible to prevent him. Though he may be a member of an Anarchist group, most often than not other members of the group do not know what he is going to do.

Many of the papers circulating among Anarchists and others who tell how bombs may be manufactured; and with a bomb or an incendiary bullet, a man can do much. There is no defense against him.

Hundreds of public buildings in London are made of inflammable materials. Yet Anarchist outrages are rare, and this may be accepted as the Anarchist tribute that is given in general among the most just in the world.

The Growth of London.

The volume of statistical abstracts issued by the London County Council contains all sorts of interesting information on every variety of subject connected with the growth of the city.

For the year 1906 Hampshire is the borough with the smallest number of deaths per thousand of population, 14.4 being the figure, while in the balance the same borough stands at the bottom of the list in the birth-rate with 16.9 per thousand.

In the whole of London in the same year 124,890 children were born, as compared with 126,690 births in the preceding year. Sturges headed the list with 10.81, or 35.3 per thousand. Deaths for the metropolis in 1906 numbered 71,913, an increase of 1,363 on the previous year. In other words, of 1,000 people living 15.3 died in 1906, as compared with a level 15 in 1905.

Of course, in point of actual numbers the city of London rejoices in the lowest figure for both births and deaths, owing to its comparatively small resident population, but its rate per thousand is neither case so low as Hampstead.

On another page we learn that in the month of London there are 867 elementary schools which are attended by 890,693 children—representing about one-fifth of the total population of the county.

No figures for the total population of Greater London are given for later than 1901, but in that year the inhabitants—man, woman and child—numbered 4,236,438.

In regard to the mere bricks and mortar may be inferred from a series of statistics which are reckoned down to 1901, that the number of houses in London was 629,853 rated houses in London, an increase of 100,000 since 1901.

The full rateable value was close upon £44,000,000, working out at £8.9s. per head, as compared with £9.14s. per head in 1901.

Crime in Scotland.

The annual criminal statistics for Scotland, just issued, reveal a state of matters which will rather damp the hopes of the disintegrator. It does not daunt the ardor of the social reformer. Apprehension and citations in twenty years have increased 40 per cent, the total number of crimes reviewed being no fewer than 175,000.

Drunkenness is on the increase, and as showing the close connection subsisting between drink and crime, it is brought out that nine-tenths of the crimes are due to the influence of excessive indulgence in alcohol. It is rather a curious fact that the most sober people are to be found in the Highland counties, where there are many distilleries, drunkenness being chiefly found where there is plenty of whisky in the hands of the lower class of laborer. It is altogether a saddening fact that the Scotland of the nineteenth century has seen more than its maintaining traditions of a rather unenviable kind—Scottish Review.

SLEUTH AND CRIMINAL

SOME CLEVER CAPTURES MADE BY MODERN DETECTIVES.

Tracing a Tragedy From the Slightest of Clues—Law Breakers Have Now Become Science in Their Methods—Identification by the Famous Bertillon System—Treatment of Dead Bodies.

The modern detective has of late been compared to a keen and discerning physician. From a few apparent tokens—a rag, a button, a handkerchief, a footprint—he has an object, and is enclosed with the gifts necessary to his profession, he will often be able to reconstruct all the different events connected with a crime, and discover the culprit—just as an able doctor manages to give the right diagnosis from a few low exterior signs. The famous detectives invented by Gaboriau, Conan Doyle, and Edgar Poe are types of the modern sleuth, and their art is one of remarkable facts concerning modern detectives and their art.

In real life, however, the work of the detective is not so easy. Some years ago at Lyons a woman was found strangled. She bore on her neck four deep, equally spaced, and on the left and one on the right, which was broader and shorter. The detective was struck by the irregular disposition of these particular marks, and he tried to apply his own fingers to them. He found it impossible, without folding back the neck, to make the marks normal way, and thus inferred that the murderer had an ill-shaped finger. The fact made the case for the criminal case. The man was discovered; his forefinger had been injured in an accident. He confessed his guilt.

The Tobacco Ash Clue.

In a small village a detective found near the body of the victim a cylinder of cigarette ash. The detective, who knew a good deal about tobacco, was greatly interested in the fact that the ash came from Algerian tobacco. This article being rare in that region, he was able to give him the description of a man to whom the day before he had sold a packet of cigarettes. He was a Frenchman, two hours later the presumed murderer was arrested, the packet of cigarettes being found near the body. These examples, which could easily be multiplied, show gifts of observation and reasoning. How is it, then, that the number of crimes committed by the modern criminal has increased every year. The reason is that the methods employed by criminals have become "improved."

Their methods have become scientific, most scientific. The criminal of today handles chloroform, opium, morphine, with the cleverness of a physician. Again, the tools used by the modern jail-bird are universal. He is now in the hands of the modern criminal and his knowledge is as extensive as that of a physician. He is a bank was rapidly opened by means of a complicated apparatus which had only been invented by a great engineer 10 months previously. But the detective also avails himself of scientific discoveries. Formerly, in cases of forgery, for instance, a drop of water was placed on the forged words. If the paper had been scratched and its surface moved in the water was immediately sucked in; if the paper had not been scratched the drop remained for a while on the top. This process was primitive, and spoiled the document. Nowadays the policeman's partner is the photographer, and on the proof the photographs of scratches are easily detected by very clear differences in the color. Photography is also used in the case of forgeries made by means of chemicals. When a heap of burnt documents is found in a fire, the sheets of paper are carefully inserted between the burnt papers. As soon as one sheet is removed the glass is rendered less brittle by the heat, and the sheet is unfolded and photographed. The process is repeated with every sheet, and a few hours all the documents are easily read.

Classified Bloodstains.

A process formerly used for the classification of bloodstains consisted in examining the size of the microscope, and from the appearance of the red globules the investigators would be able to determine the nature of the blood. Unfortunately this examination gave no result when the bloodstains were not recent. The new, more scientific method is used. The stain is washed; a few drops of the water used are poured into a tube containing some specific serum from a rabbit inoculated with human blood. When the addition of the water produces in the serum a fine deposit, and gives a misty appearance to the liquid, one can be perfectly certain that the bloodstains are human. The test is usually and usually is nowadays a psychological.

On a sheet of paper a series of words are written, a few of them having no connection with, and others having a direct or indirect connection with the crime. The list is handed to the prisoner. He is asked to pronounce loudly the words which—by association of ideas—lead him to his crime. When reading the written words. It has been discovered that for words having no connection with the crime his answers came at once. At the word "link," for instance, the man will answer rapidly "paper, pen, write," or a similar answer. When he reads the word "link" he will answer in the same manner and with the same rapidity to all words having no connection with the crime. If he is guilty he will avoid carefully those words having any relation to his crime, and he will take a long time before answering for instance, blood, dagger, heart, after having read about the word "knife" on the list. The words are then placed between the lips of the prisoner and connected with a dial which indicates the time he takes to read the words. The man is then asked to read the words again, and the length of the man's hesitation.

Her New Perspective.

By LULU JOHNSON.

Copyright, 1926, by E. A. Parcells.

Aboard the liner the last months were being said. Some of the more cautious among the home stayers had already gathered at the end of the pier to wave farewells cut short on the deck through the fear of being carried off, and others were trooping down the gangplank.

Now and then a couple of cabin stewards rushed up the gangway bearing the steam trunks and parcels of some belated arrival, and from the pier the sharp exhaust of the donkey engines punctuated the farewells as the busy drums coiled and uncoiled the ropes by which the last of the hold luggage was being rushed to the cavernous depths of the huge ship.

Busy little tugs putted about the end of the pier to assist in turning the huge bulk of the steamer, and a man in a redoubt paddled about the stern to be on hand in case of an accident.

To Nella Wynn the scene was decidedly novel. Only the day before she had arrived in New York from her inland home for the purpose of emigrating, and for the first time she had realized what a steamer really was. Now she could scarcely believe that presently this great black vessel would slip down the bay and so out to the broad ocean beyond the sight of land. For a time she was absorbed in watching the crowds, but the very presence of this crush of humanity presently began to weigh upon her spirits.

It had been hard to raise the funds to send her abroad, so none of the family had been able to accompany her to New York. She had no acquaintances in the city, and she was absolutely alone in this mob of leave takers. There was no one to stand on the edge of the pier and wave farewell, no one to give her a friendly farewell kiss. She was even more alone than the little crowd of returning emigrants huddled on the lower deck forward.

Back in Crossville it had seemed a great thing to be going to Paris to structure and unsheltered platform, and her friends standing there to wave the last farewell. It had been so different from the last time she had left before, and she wished herself back with her parents and the girls and Harry Temple.

She could still see Temple's hat look when he received her gentle "No" to his proposal. He had always sought to oppose her career, contending that she would be far happier in her own home than as a choir singer or platform star. She had hated him for his apparent disbelief in her powers, and her refusal had been promptly given. She was sure that if he asked her now she would gladly abandon her career and go back to Crossville with him, but Harry was with the rest of the dear ones nearly a thousand miles away.

There was a gentle tapping on the door, and she arose to admit the stewards.

"There's a gentleman who would like to see you on deck," she was told with a touch of caution. "He is Mr. Temple, and he asks that he may have the pleasure of your society."

"Temple!" gasped Nella. "A tall man?"

"With a light mustache and such handsome gray eyes," assented the steward, mindful of the generous tip and awaiting the removal of the ribbon.

Nella emerged from the gangway to find Temple peering at her impatiently. He hurried toward her as she approached, and led her to a cozy corner, where two leather chairs were placed close together.

"I am content that you are here. That is enough for me," she said shyly.

"But how did you ever get away?" "Next train after you left," was the prompt response. "My chum at college, Jack Hawkwright, is representing my father's business in Paris, and when you told me to come I wrote asking him if he could find a place for me. I got an answer by cable to come at once."

"You never let me know?" she said reproachfully. Temple smiled.

"I had an idea," he said softly, "that perhaps it would be better to wait until after we had left port. It is lonesome work sailing alone and I was afraid."

"You were right," said Nella. "It has shown me many things in a new light. Perhaps if you were to ask a certain question over and over again."

"I do ask the question over again," he declared earnestly. "I shall never cease asking that question until your answer is 'Yes' now," she said shyly. "I see life more clearly, and love is better than a career, after all."

"And heaven's blessing on the new perspective," he said fervently as his hand clasped hers in the early dusk that was settling down upon the sea.

When it hurt.

A German surgeon in the Franco-Prussian war had occasion to lance an abscess for a poor fellow, and, as the sore was obstinate, it became necessary to use the knife twice. The operation was not a very painful one, but the patient declared that it had nearly killed him, and when a third resort to the lancet was proposed he protested that he could never go through the operation alive.

The surgeon promised to make it easy for him and, calling up a few of the longshoremen, ordered one of them to hold his hands close over the patient's eyes and two others to grasp his hands firmly.

"This arrangement," explained the doctor, "is said to prevent pain in such an operation. Now, lie perfectly quiet, and when I say 'Now' prepare yourself."

The surgeon at once began quietly with his work and in a short time had completed the operation without the least trouble, the patient lying as quiet as though in sleep.

When all was done the surgeon laid down the knife and said, "Now!" Such a roar came from the lips of the sick man as seldom heard from any human being. He struggled to free himself, yelling, "Oh, doctor, you're killing me!"

Shouts of laughter soon drowned his cries, and he was told that the operation had been all over before the signal was given. It was a good joke, but it is doubtful if the poor fellow could ever be made to believe that he did not feel actual pain immediately after that fatal "Now!"

Chinese Eating.

It is probably true that the Chinese use a greater variety of meats than do the people of other countries, although but little land is set apart for grazing or for the cultivation of food for themselves. Beef is not a common meat, principally because of the Buddhist prejudice against killing any animal and particularly such a useful one.

Spice here can be so successfully reared, pork is undoubtedly, after rice, the leading article of food. This is eaten in every form, and one may say that every part of the animal is used for food. Horseflesh, venison, antelope and bear are often seen, but in passing through the markets port, mutton and fowls are the most conspicuous.

For fish the Chinese have a voracious appetite, nothing from the water, either fresh or salt, being rejected. A few kittens and puppies may be found for sale in cages. Those which are intended for the table are fed upon grain and clean food, so that if the nature of this food be considered it is far more wholesome than is the unclean hog that is used for eating.

For the Chinese have a dog farm—a staple article of food is pure action.—London Standard.

SPRING BLOOD IS BAD BLOOD

How to Get New Health and Strength in the Spring.

The winter months are trying to the health of even the most robust. Confinement indoors in overcast and nearly always badly ventilated rooms—in the home, in the shop and in the school—taxes the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes thin and watery, or clogged with impurities, the liver sags, the kidneys weakened. Sometimes you get up in the morning just as tired as when you went to bed. Some people have headaches; others are so spritely; some have pimples and skin eruptions. These are all spring symptoms that the blood is out of condition. You can't cure these troubles with purgative medicines, which merely gallop through the system leaving you still weaker. What you need to give you strength in spring is a tonic, and the one always reliable tonic and blood builder is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

These pills not only banish spring evils, but they restore the more serious ailments that follow, such as anemia, nervous debility, rheumatism, indigestion and kidney trouble. Every dose of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills makes new, rich, red blood which strengthens every nerve, every organ and every part of the body. This is the reason why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the favorite spring medicine with thousands and thousands throughout Canada. It is a tonic and blood builder, and you will have energy and strength to resist the torrid heat of summer. Mrs. Jas. H. Haskel, Port Matland, N.S., says: "I was troubled with headaches, and I had a bad taste in my mouth, my tongue was coated and I was easily depressed. I got a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and it was not long before they began to help me. I was soon feeling as well as ever I had been."

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"Pa," complained the boy, "so long as I go to the same school with Tom Thiff I can't be a Christian Scientist."

"What?" cried the pillar of the new church. "Can't you?"

"Cause it's hard to believe that a punch in the jaw is all my imagination."—Catholic Standard and Times.

In its initial stages a cold is a local ailment easily dealt with. But many neglect it, and the result is often a series of distressing seizures of the bronchial tubes and lungs that render life miserable for the unhappy victim. As a matter of fact, there is nothing in the handy medicine line so certain in curative results as Bickel's Anti-Consumption Cough and Cold Remedy for coughs and colds.

"Your husband," he hazarded, "is an inventor?"

"Yes," she said, her red lip curling. "Some of his schemes for coming home late at night are in use all over the country."

I heard a story lately of a Highlander who had been persuaded to buy a ticket for a raffle.

"He won the first prize," a thespian, but on being told it was good fortune, instead of hugging himself with delight he said:

"Well, that's just my luck, buyin' two tickets when yin wad 'a done. It's just a saxe-pence waste!"—Dundee Journal.

Minard's Liniment Relieves Neuralgia.

"About the greatest man that ever lived in this community was Skinner—broad-minded, big-hearted and brilliant—and yet he died with all his talents and goodness unappreciated."

"How did you come to find out about it?"

"I married his widow."—Pick-Me-Up.

ENGLISH SPRAIN LINIMENT removes all hard, soft or calloused lumps, burns, scalds, hemorrhoids, sprains, sore and swollen throats, coughs, etc. Price 50c per bottle. Warranted the most wonderful British Cure ever known.

"I am afraid that step is loose," an American once said to the jaunting car driver he had engaged.

The man took hold of the step and shook it. "Ah, ahure," said he, "it's too strong, it is. What are ye afraid of?"

As he was talking the thing came off in his hand.

This mishap did not, however, embarrass the Irishman, for, with the sunniest of smiles, he turned to his lady, saying:

NEW "SIAMESE" TWINS.

Birth of Baby Girls at Brighton With One Backbone.

Brighton has furnished a parallel to the famous Siamese twins, a young woman having given birth to two little girls joined inseparably at the hips, their backbones meeting at the lower ends of the body.

They also have certain internal organs in common; otherwise they are entirely developed children with every prospect of a vigorous existence.

Dr. Rooth, who attended at the birth, says that the case is phenomenal. The children have evidently entirely separate individualities, for one has been noticed to wake up, and very without disturbing the other, and one has had pain without the other being concerned.

The doctor says: "I am trying to get the foster-parents to consent to an operation to separate the children, but they demur. Such an operation might cause the death of one or both of the twins, of course, have the same blood supply, but I think one of them would continue to live."

"Joined as they are, any infantile disease, such as measles, which one might catch, would be sure to be communicated to the other."

"I intend to exhibit the phenomenon to the Medical Society next week, and I am sure it will be a most interesting case. It is extremely rare to find such children in apparently perfect health."

The twins are the daughters of a maid-servant, and are now three weeks old. One of them is very cold, but the other is in perfect health. They sleep peacefully in their cradle back to back.

It is intended to christen them Victoria and Margaret. They have been made to the public in the past, and it is her intention to present to allow only the medical profession to inspect them.

ROBBERY BY HYPONOTISM.

Marquis of Townshend Takes Oud Accusation Against Curate.

A remarkable case of hypnotism and suggestion, occupying the attention of a London court, in which the Marquis of Townshend is the plaintiff, and the Rev. Arthur Robins, one time curate of the fashionable Holy Trinity Church.

The Marquis is the plaintiff in the case, and he charges the curate with having hypnotically wheedled from him various pieces of jewelry and valuable heirlooms, and also the love of his beautiful wife, which the curate has deprived him of by slander.

The Marquis says that he was hypnotized by the curate, who used the Rev. Arthur Robins, one time curate of the fashionable Holy Trinity Church.

Backache, Headache Internal Pains.

MR. JOSEPH LACELLE, 124 BROADWAY, DETROIT, MICH.

"If every suffering woman would take Peruna, they would soon be well and never be without it."

"I suffered with backache, head-ache, and nothing relieved me until I took Peruna. This medicine is far better than any other medicine for these troubles. A few bottles relieved me of my miserable, half-dread, half-alive condition."

"I am now in good health, have neither ache nor pain, nor have I had any for the past year."

"Dyspepsia and indigestion. Mde. Joseph Beaudoin, 69 Rue St. Olivier, Quebec, P.Q., Can., writes: 'Peruna is wonderful for indigestion. I eat whatever I want and no longer feel any oppression. Having had dyspepsia for a long time, and having tried various other remedies, I decided to try Peruna and with the fourth bottle of it I was perfectly cured.'"

CANADA AS A NATION

We hear many opinions nowadays from many of the deep thinking men regarding the future of Canada, which if condensed and summarized, we obtain the following conclusions: Canada, a colony of Great Britain, as now and forever, Canada, an independent nation, Canada and the United States consolidated for business and political purposes, thus forming the greatest national power the world has ever seen.

Many believe with "ambassador Bryce, that the status quo is sufficient and that Canada will, as now, continue to be a part and parcel of the British Empire for all time, and will stand for the old flag and policy.

Some argue that eventually the North American continent will be the home of three nationalities, of which Canada will be one, and the United States and Mexico the other two. These are those who are out for a consolidation of Canada and the United States.

The advocates of the latter are up against vexatious problems which will result in many a headache before the organization to such an end is satisfactorily completed, some of which we are about to refer to.

According to the treaty of Paris made in 1763, rights and privileges were guaranteed to the French inhabitants of Quebec that the constitution of the United States would not allow to be re-organized in 1908. If it were possible to continue the conditions that exist in Quebec, there would be one state in the union that would not be in "consonance with the policy of the other states. Quebec would not voluntarily give up its present political status, and without Quebec there could be no confederation between the provinces of Canada and the States of the Union.

The negro problem, the pension list problem, the Philippine problem, the anarchist problem, the battleship and many other vexatious problems exist which Canada as will not permit, and which do not appeal to Canadians on this side of the boundary as inducements to a partnership between the two countries. We are content to worry along with our own troubles, and to let the United States thrash out in their own way the vexatious questions now staring them in the face.

Canada, with its six millions of people is not in its infancy, it is quite of age, and should arrive very soon at some definite stand as to its future relations with other nations. Kipling in referring to Canada as a grown-up child, says: "Daughter and I in my mother's house, but mistress in my own."

Canada today enjoys absolute freedom as far as independence goes, as up to the present time there have been no entangling alliances that compel Canada to be a party to foreign wars in behalf of the mother land, where Canada has no representation on the floor of its parliament.

Canadians proved their love for the mother country when she voluntarily sent thousands to South Africa, but they were not under any obligation to do so. We are not asked to contribute to the maintenance of the navy, we are guarded jealously, and zealously by the mightiest navy in the world, and in time of trouble would have the support of one of the finest body of soldiers known, this protection we do not have to provide for.

We are spared the expense of defending ourselves, and were we independent, our prestige would fall, and soon we should find ourselves in the predicament of some of the South American countries. Under great Britain's wing we are safe from molestation or interference, and there we should remain.

There are bound to be many differences of opinion in the future as well as in the past between the United States and Canada regarding boundaries, treaties and other matters that come up between nations. In the past Canada has been given the short end of the deal by reason of the Ashburton and the Alveston's concluding that it was best for Britain that it should be so. Such a system must stop at once, for Canada has men better able to deal with such matters than British statesmen.

A few more deals like the Alaska boundary question and Canada will "sure try" to carve out a future for itself for principle's sake.

BLAIRMORE RACE MEET

Thursday and Friday of this week the Blairmore Association held their race meet at Blairmore. Considering the recent heavy rains the track was in good condition. There were goodly crowds at both days' races. Some very fine horses were present. Thursday seemed to be the best day, as the weather was finest.

The race meet at Blairmore is becoming quite an interesting annual affair, and is looked forward to with much interest not only by the lovers of horse racing, but also hundreds of spectators who enjoy the meet, as it affords them an opportunity of meeting old and new friends.

H. E. Lyon's horse won in the first day's race. The "Miner" is indebted to Mr. H. E. Lyon for the report of the races and he has our thanks, as it affords this paper an opportunity to give them a week ahead of any other paper in the Pass. Below the races are given:

Mrs. J. O. McDonald has been confined to the house suffering from pleurisy.

H. Milie, C.P.R. coal inspector, returned from Michel Thursday morning, owing to the accident Mr. Jones met with.

J. A. Manly, brother of L. Manly, proprietor of the Grand Union hotel, spent Thursday in town. Mr. Manly is from Chicago and is a civil engineer. He was one of the promoters of the town of Grand Forks, B. C., an old timer in British Columbia and well and favorably known there.

W. A. Jones, C.P.R. coal inspector, met with a serious accident on Wednesday evening. Mr. James Smart's little son James was carrying his 22 calibre rifle and had it cocked full, when Mr. S. Shone's little boy came up behind Jimmie Smart and thinking he would like to see what the rifle would do, childlike, pulled the trigger, firing off the weapon. The ball went right through Mr. Jones' right leg, making a nasty wound. The doctor dressed the wound, and it is hoped Mr. Jones will be at his work again shortly.

A quadrille club is to be started in town. Mr. J. R. Crawford, organist of St. Alban's church, in company with Mr. John Stafford, are the principal movers in the club. They will organize next Friday evening, May 22nd, and anyone wishing to join will kindly see or write Mr. Crawford, or attend a meeting to be held next Friday evening in the Eagles' hall. This club is being organized solely for pleasure, and all the ladies and gentlemen of the town and district are invited to attend the meeting. The fact of Messrs. Crawford and Stafford being at the head of the club will be a guarantee of its being a success.

HONEY is one of the earliest sweets of which we have any knowledge. In little records honey is frequently referred to, not only as an article of food, but as a synonym for sweetness. Among the provisions bestowed by Joseph upon Benjamin, and included among other gifts sent as friendly offerings on sundry occasions; the fowls and wild honey of John the Baptist—these and other references to honey are familiar to all Scripture students. For some unexplained reason, honey was, in certain circumstances, supposed to confer wisdom upon the one who ate it. "Butter and honey shall he eat that he may know to refuse the evil and to choose the good," said Isaiah; and there is the story told of Jonathan eating the forbidden honeycomb, and thereby having his eyes enlightened. Leaving sacred history, we recall that the honey of Hyettus has been famous ever since the days when Greece was a power, and there are mentions of honey in many classical writings.

It seems a little odd that honey is not more of an article of diet in this country—not because of indolence, but in its sacred and profane writings, but because in other countries it is held in high esteem as a food. The traveler in Switzerland would find that his breakfast was at fault if there were not a dish of clear, strained honey provided for him. The dwellers in the Black Forest and in other parts of Germany make honey an important part of their regular diet, and other European nations hold honey in good repute.

WHAT IT IS COMPOSED OF

In the United States it does not think it generally has a good reputation. I have found a prevailing impression that it is not digestible. "The careful how you eat honey," I have been warned by those who seemed to understand their subject, "with bread." He also supplies a definition of the sweet under consideration.

"Honey is a form of sugar prepared from the nectar of various flowering plants, gathered by bees, and stored by them in cells. It is a vegetable product, although manufactured by an insect. In addition to sugar, it holds several other ingredients, principally wax, gum, pigment and odorous materials. The sugar exists in two forms: crystallizable and non-crystallizable. The former is somewhat similar to glucose." These follow an analysis, from which we learn that honey contains more than 78 per cent. of fruit sugar and over 16 per cent. of water, as well as a negligible quantity of other ingredients.

Nothing in this sounds especially threatening to the digestion, and yet that fact remains that honey disagrees with some persons seriously, and when it disagrees with them at all, it is likely to be in a very unpleasant fashion. There can be no doubt that honey in the comb is more of a tax to the stomach than the strained honey. Even if the cells are those made by the bees themselves, instead of the artificial comb of paraffine now manufactured as a labor-saving means for the insects, it stands to reason that the wax cannot be easily assimilated. Let me counsel those who have suffered from eating honey in the comb to make a cautious trial of the strained honey before condemning the sweet entirely as an article of diet.

There is no question as to the value of honey in treatment of colds of the throat or chest. Its presence is taken for granted in many of the preparations manufactured for use in coughs and colds, and it is most soothing to the irritated throat membrane. The house-

Mother's Honey Drops.
A mother who wishes to prepare a remedy of this sort of which she can be sure, and who objects to unobscured drugs in her cough syrups, may beat up a little honey and cream together, as it is needed, and give it to her invalid by the teaspoonful to check cough or irritation.

Honey Bears Its Part in Various Articles of Food.
Honey bears its part in various articles of food as well as in the pharmacy of the household, and it will be worth while for the woman who seeks a change in cookery to try some of the dishes in which honey is an ingredient. I append recipes for a few of them:

Honey Cakes.
Sift two cups of flour and stir into them a cupful of sugar, cream, two tablespoon-

Honey Gingerbread.
Beat two tablespoonfuls of strained honey into half a cupful of butter, first warming the butter slightly. Whip the two to a cream and then beat in a teaspoonful of cinnamon and a tablespoonful of powdered sugar and of ground ginger. Have ready four eggs, well beaten, the yolks and whites separately, and add these alternately in three cupfuls of flour stirred with a wooden spoonful of baking powder to a final vigorous beating of about one minute and turn into shallow baking tins or small muffins or jelly tins. Bake, covered, for half an hour; uncover and brown the tops. They should be steady and

Dutch Honey Cakes.
From your breadbox take a piece of your raised bread dough weighing about a pound and work into it a pound of strained honey, a quarter cupful of butter, a half teaspoon of cinnamon and a pinch each of ground cloves and nutmeg, the strained rind of a lemon, a quarter pound of citron and an ounce of candied ginger, beat, and the whites of two, whipped light; a half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in hot water and one cupful of flour. Make into a loaf and bake covered for three-quarters of an hour before uncovering and browning. In some respects this resembles the old-fashioned New England bread cake, although much more elaborate and indigestible.

Honey and Nut Cordial.
Blanch and pound four ounces of bitter almonds and two ounces of sweet almonds and mix them with two ounces of strained sugar. Boil a pint of milk let it get cold and put with it the nuts and sugar, the juice and strained rind of three lemons, and two quarts of strained honey and two quarts of good water. Boil for two days, shaking them up every day. At the end of the time strain the mixture through a fine cloth bottle and seal.

Honey Ginger Wafers.
Mix together a cupful of sugar and two cupfuls of flour and rub into them half a cupful of butter, and stir in a half teaspoonful of ground ginger. Add to this the juice of a lemon and half the butter beaten to a cream. Three-quarters of a pound of strained honey, half a pound of butter, and a teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in a little boiling water. Roll out a quarter of an inch thick, cut into small cakes with a biscuit cutter, and bake twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven.

English Honey Cakes.
Mix a quarter pound of sugar with a pound of flour and a half pound of butter, and beat to a cream. Add to this a pound of strained honey, half a pound of butter, and a teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in a little boiling water. Roll out a quarter of an inch thick, cut into small cakes with a biscuit cutter, and bake twenty-five minutes in a moderate oven.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

THE housewife who spilled ink upon the carpet of a fastidious "in-law" may remove it without loss to the color of the carpet. Lay the inked spot with a sponge or cloth (and lots of water) into which has been stirred a little of the following mixture: One part of water to one part of ammonia. Rub the mixture into the spot with a sponge or cloth. The ink will disappear. (Harrison, Pa.)

Cinnamon Buns.
Set aside for these a cupful of dough after it has had the second rising on baking dish. Cream a little butter and mix with it the quantity of sugar called for in the dough. Beat the eggs and mix with the sugar and butter. Add the cinnamon and the yeast (about a cupful of soda dissolved in hot water) and mix thoroughly. Roll the dough into a long strip and cut into small buns. Bake in a moderate oven for half an hour.

Wants Books for Boys.
I am the mother of four little boys. The oldest is six and the youngest is two. I have had all the three Bibles, and I have had all the three Testaments. I have had all the three Bibles, and I have had all the three Testaments. I have had all the three Bibles, and I have had all the three Testaments.

onion in hard when you have sliced it, grate two raw potatoes of medium size. Put the grated potatoes into the water and cook for a minute, and it is ready to use. (Chicago.)

Cement for Glass.
I clip from your column a recipe for a cement for glass for an aquarium. The formula for aquarium cement recommended by the United States Fish Commission is as follows:

I hope the two correspondents who have asked for aquarium cement will see and keep these formulas. Both are excellent.

Wants Recipe for Goulash.
I have watched the exchange from week to week in the hope that somebody would send in a recipe for Hungarian goulash. Will you try to get it for me? What are the proper meats to be used in it?

Novel Dishes for Afternoon Affairs.
What mistress of a house or cozy apartment does not delight in having three congenial women friends in for an "all-day" affair? Be the amusement cards or intimate talk over the fancy work, the hostess wishes to enjoy every minute of her guests' stay and can well wish to plan her simple luncheon menu with that end in view.

A New Salad.
A new variation on the new fashionable Waldorf salad has been invented, where the apple is peeled, cored and cut in cross slices. One slice is laid upon a few lettuce leaves on each plate, and over it is put a layer of hard-boiled and cream cheese, which has been put through a ricer. The salad is then garnished with a whole lettuce leaf, a slice of cucumber, and a slice of tomato.

Towels for a Casual Guest.
Most attractive little towels are shown in the shops measuring about six inches square, wide and sixteen inches long. They are very useful in the bath room for the use of guests and they are far less liable to have washed than the larger and handsomer ones.

He warned me not to saturate the cloth and lay it upon the chubbiness, as it might cause a blister. I was to wipe the feet of themselves. If I recollect aright, the children were cured in a week's time. I trust this remedy may relieve other sufferers as it relieved mine.

Do you know of any way to dye horsehair braid which, although in good condition, has become very dirty with use. I should like to hear from you again.
